A pleasingly varied collection of stories in which the mundane details of everyday life are nicely balanced with some special highpoints and excitements. Jarman's extended Afro-Caribbean family is well-constructed and Jessame's interaction with her grandparents and her cheery aunt is affectionate without being overly sentimental. Adjoa Andoh gives each of the characters a clear and warm personality and doesn't try to over-dramatise the highpoints of the stories so saving them from becoming falsely thrilling. Good value, too, as there are a lot of stories making it a very full tape.
