Felicity, brought up by the sea, is used to its ways, its twists and sudden turns of mood. Used to it, but never trusting it. The Grey Gulls are particularly treacherous, certainly not the place to find a man dressed in a 'city suit', trousers rolled to the knees, trying to cross the racing currents. Although Felicity manages to rescue the 'mysterious Mr Ross', there is something strange about him. 'She had saved his life and that made a sort of bond between them ... whatever Miss Pepper said about not trusting him.' Vivien Alcock grabs your attention and interest all the way through this tightly constructed tale; not quite the 'tales of the unexpected', but genuinely spine-tingling in its own way.
