Coming home from school one day, 9-year-old Pali can't understand why the flat door was open and everything is as though someone had just left the room. Later in the day he learns that his parents have been taken away by the Germans. When his sister Suzy and her friend Peter arrive from school, they have to decide what to do next - three children on their own - Jewish children too, with nowhere to go, nowhere to hide. Then their aunt miraculously appears having escaped from the soldiers who took her, her brother-in-law and her sister away. She and the children plan a desperate escape plan to flee from Hungary. The plight of children caught up in the Holocaust is graphically described in one of Elli$A Dillon's last novels before her death a year ago.
