A provocative, uncomfortable read told in diary form by Mary, a teenage girl, and a group of soldiers. The action takes place in the future when six soldiers - five volunteers and the professional, unemotional Sergeant Hobbs - are travelling through the countryside to fight against invaders. Coming across Mary, they take her as their guide although few trust her. She forms a friendship with the youngest, Hobbs, and a fragile relationship develops between them. This isn't an easy narrative, but it gives the reader much food for thought about the ethics of war, its terrible cost in human tragedy and the toll on human lives and emotions.
